Our Approach

According to our international approach, a BPO service is constituted of three phases:

Drawing up a SLA

- Service level agreements (SLAs) are agreements or contracts with suppliers that define the service they must provide and the level of service to be delivered, and which also set out responsibilities and priorities.
- Typical SLAs set out: the service being provided; the standards of service; the timetable for delivery; respective responsibilities of supplier and customer; provisions for legal and regulatory compliance; mechanisms for monitoring and reporting of service; payment terms; termination conditions.

- Outsourcing offers the benefits of flexibility, cost savings and improved efficiency while freeing up management to focus on running their businesses.
- Crowe Kazakhstan provides: Accounting & Tax Services - including bookkeeping, preparation of management accounts and related reporting; Corporate Secretariat; Payroll; Work In Time – a market-leading time recording, billing and payroll solution for the recruitment sector.

Managing BPO

Monitoring a SLA

- SLA is a bilateral agreement between a service customer and a service provider (signatory parties). Anyhow, SLA monitoring may require the involvement of third parties (either a function needs to be carried out that neither a service provider nor customer wants to do).
- In the initial stage, Crowe Kazakhstan will offer such service in parallel with the operational management of the business process outsourcing.
